Dunklin named conservationist of the year

MEMPHIS, Tenn. – George Dunklin Jr., a commissioner with the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission and Ducks Unlimited Life Sponsor, was presented with Budweiser's Conservationist of the Year award at the 2009 SHOT Show in Orlando, Fla.

Dunklin has been a commissioner for the AGFC since 2005 after being appointed by former Gov. Mike Huckabee. He also has been a member of Ducks Unlimited for 30 years and is a member of the president's council.

He was DU district chairman for 12 years, conservation committee member 1990-95 and sponsor chairman for 15 years and previously served on the DU Growth and Innovations Committee. He currently sits on the board of directors and is also the senior vice-president of the Conservation Programs Committee.

"DU and wetland and associated habitat conservation has been a part of my life forever," said Dunklin after accepting the award. "This award means a lot to me, but I hope that others will look at what they can do in the habitat conservation arena through organizations such as DU."

Budweiser's Conservationist of the Year award is a prestigious award that also comes with a $50,000 prize from Budweiser and the National

Fish and Wildlife Foundation. The four finalists were narrowed down and then voted on by people visiting www.budweiser.com.

Dunklin's passion for habitat conservation is seen in his profession as a rice farmer in Stuttgart, Ark. His work in conservation isn't only geared toward DU, but he also sits on the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission among other rice grower's associations and organizations. His conservation efforts have been tireless and his personal property is a model for betterment of an ecosystem.

"George is an integral part of this organization and a leader among leaders," said Don Young, DU executive vice-president. "His role in conservation within DU, the state of Arkansas and various farming organizations; puts him in a league of his own. We are happy to see he is being given recognition for his efforts from one of our most important corporate partners."

With more than a million supporters, Ducks Unlimited is the world's largest and most effective wetland and waterfowl conservation organization with more than 12 million acres conserved. The United States alone has lost more than half of its original wetlands – nature's most productive ecosystem – and continues to lose more than 80,000 wetland acres each year.

Signing paves way to implement White River minimum flows

LITTLE ROCK – The Honorable John Paul Woodley, assistant secretary of the Army for civil works, signed a record of decision last week that paves the way for implementation of the White River Minimum Flows Project at Bull Shoals and Norfork lakes. For several years, the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission has been working with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to move this program forward.

The project reallocates some storage space in each of the two lakes to provide minimum releases from the two dams during times when hydropower is not being generated to keep a steady release of cold water flowing for downstream trout. The Corps still requires funding from Congress to implement the project, and funds will be required from the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission as well.

Minimum flows will be implemented independently at each of the two lakes, and each will have a separate Project Participation Agreement. While a timetable has not yet been developed, primarily because of uncertainty when funding will become available, the next steps are as follows:

1. Develop Project Participation Agreements.
2. PPA is signed by participating stakeholders.
3. Design bulkheads, siphon system (Norfork Dam only), modified lakeside facilities, develop drought contingency plan, update Bull Shoals and Norfork Water Control Manuals.
4. Congress appropriates necessary funds.
5. Execute PPA's.
6. Relocate and modify lakeside facilities to accommodate slightly higher lake levels.
7. Capture storage at Bull Shoals and Norfork lakes.
8. Implement White River Minimum Flows operation.

The White River Minimum Flows study began with the Water Resource Development Acts of 1999 and 2000, which authorized a storage reallocation in the White River lakes to sustain the downstream trout fishery. The legislation directed the Corps to conduct appropriate studies.

The Energy and Water Bill of 2006 authorized implementation of White River Minimum Flows and focused the project on Bull Shoals and Norfork lakes, removing Beaver, Table Rock and Greers Ferry lakes from consideration. The Record of Decision is the culmination of the legislation and the Corps' studies.

More information about the White River Minimum Flow project is on the Internet at <http://www.swl.usace.army.mil/planning/wrminflow.html>.

Walton Short's long elk legacy comes to an end

MAGNOLIA – Arkansas's premier elk hunter has died at the age of 84. Walton Short's legacy will be forever intertwined with the state's elk herd. Short died Sunday, Jan. 18.

In the 11 years since Arkansas's first elk hunt, Short became a prominent figure in the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission's elk program. His bull from the September 2007 hunt completed an improbable quest – Short's goal of taking two elk in each of the state's four public-land elk zones.

"It means a lot to me," said Short at the time. "I just love it. When I get an elk in my sights, I just tremble. I love to hunt elk and I love even more to be able to hunt elk in Arkansas."

Short didn't set out to kill eight bulls in Arkansas. The AGFC awards most elk permits through a random drawing at the annual Buffalo River Elk Festival in Jasper, and donates two permits each year to the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, which auctions the tags to raise money for habitat work. In 1999, the second year of the state's hunt, Short paid $10,000 for a permit at a RMEF auction. After taking a 6x7 bull that year, he was hooked. The next year he bought a permit for $15,000.

"I started out and killed two bulls in the first zone," said Short. "And then I decided I'd just keep going and try to get two in every zone."

In eight years of hunting elk in Arkansas, Short paid $159,000 for permits.

"He's doing it because he loves these elk," said Steve Whitehead of Magnolia, a close friend who has assisted Short on his last three Arkansas hunts. "He's the best friend the Arkansas elk have ever had."

Mike Cartwright, former AGFC elk program coordinator, cited the significance of Short's contributions.

"He wanted to help the resource, and it has been real important to us," Cartwright said. "The work we do is very expensive – controlled burns, openings, timber work, research projects, helicopter surveys – it adds up. In part, his contributions are responsible for future generations being able to hunt elk and view elk in Arkansas."

The sun has set on Short's days as the leading man of Arkansas elk hunting, but not on his legacy. "I just want people to remember it," Short said. "No matter how they remember it, just remember it."

Ladder can be a lifesaver in a boating accident

LITTLE ROCK – It is hardly a surprise to read statistics showing the chief cause of boating accident deaths is falls from a boat.

Persons who aren't wearing life jackets and fall from a boat are often drowning victims. The obvious answer and one heavily emphasizes in all boating safety classes is to wear a life jacket anytime you're using a boat.

There is a second element to this safety advice, according to boating safety staff members at the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission. Equip your boat with a ladder.

Even when a person is wearing a life jacket, a fall into the water can bring major problems in getting back on board that boat, especially if the person who falls is alone.

Example: An angler working a trotline for catfish leans too far to the side when a fish jerks on the line. He or she falls into the water, and no one else is around. The life jacket keeps the person afloat, but climbing back into the boat is difficult, sometimes impossible.

A lightweight ladder is the answer here.

The ladder can be mounted on a boat's transom to the side of the outboard motor, or it can be kept inside but within reach of someone in the water.

Flatbottom boats commonly are used by fishermen, trotliners included. Some anglers call them jon boats. Their sides are only 15 to 18 inches high in most cases, but this is a major hurdle for a person in the water, especially when the person is fully clothed. It is much more difficult if the water is cold.

Even for someone wearing a life jacket, hypothermia can quickly set in after a fall from a boat. Getting out of the water is vital.

Small ladders can be metal and rigid or plastic and flexible. Two rungs are usually sufficient, but some ladders of this type have three rungs.

Another consideration is where the ladder is attached to the boat. With a small flatbottom boat, a ladder on its side may not keep the boat upright with an adult attempts to climb from the water back into the boat. The boat could capsize, adding to the boater's woes.

Better is a ladder mounted on the transom at the rear of the boat. It has to be to one side to be out of the way of the outboard motor. A person using a rear-mounted ladder to climb from the water has the long dimension of the boat to work against rather than the narrow beam or side dimension of the boat.

A final bit of advice from boating safety personnel is to practice using that ladder. Make it a drill for everyone who may be aboard – in warm weather, naturally. Get into the water then climb out by using the ladder. Yes, it may be awkward the first attempt, but it can be a life saver.

Arkansas wildlife officer wins NWTF award

EDGEFIELD, S.C. - Corporal Doug Pearce, a wildlife officer with the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission will be honored by the National Wild Turkey Federation for his efforts in conserving America's wildlife.

Pearce, of Pangburn, will be recognized as the NWTF's Arkansas Wildlife Law Enforcement Officer of the Year during its 33rd annual Convention and Sport Show, held Feb. 19-22, at the Gaylord Opryland Resort and Convention Center in Nashville, Tenn.

The NWTF initiated the State Wildlife Law Enforcement Officer of the Year award in 2000 to highlight the contributions from wildlife officers across the country. In addition to playing a crucial role in helping to convict wildlife criminals, many wildlife officers volunteer their own time to help educate youth about the importance of wildlife, conservation and our hunting traditions.

By earning the State Wildlife Officer of the Year award, Pearce and other state winners are eligible for the NWTF's National Law Enforcement Officer of the Year award, which will be presented during the NWTF's Awards Banquet Saturday, Feb. 21 during the Convention and Sport Show.

For more information about the NWTF's Convention and Sport Show, visit http://www.nwtf.org/special_events/convention.html.

For more information about the NWTF's law enforcement award winners, or the NWTF's efforts to support wildlife law enforcement, call (800) THE-NWTF, or visit www.nwtf.org.
